1. ROSS

The first time I saw this shop i thought this was yet again another place for cheap and low quality clothing but after taking a good look inside, I was wrong! This place is packed with all kinds of cheap clothing and accessories. Even though it's cheap clothing, their is still lots of quality brand such as Calvin Klein, Polo, and Underarmor. You can easily spend one hour here digging for treasures. You can easily find something good for your friends here at a nice price.

2. THEO Chocolates

Theo chocolates is one of those shops that I think are especially unique in Seattle. It is an organic chocolate factory located in Fremont. Yes, there is much more to do in Fremont other than the troll. They also provide a chocolate tour to see how their chocolates are made. I haven't gotten a chance to do the tour but I heard it was pretty good. You can try out most of the chocolates inside and best of all, they are at an affordable price. Theo Chocolates also features a lot of cool flavors such as raspberry, ginger, orange, and many more. My personal favorite was the coconut curry. Suspicious at first, I tried out the free samples an was surprised how it good it tasted. It turned out curry was a perfect element for chocolate.

3. Shop next to crab pot

If you ever get a chance to eat at the famous restaurant Crab Pot, you will definitely pass by a souvenir shop that's right next to it. This is one of those shops you will find in basically every tourist spot and even though the products aren't that good, it's cheap and suitable to give to friends so if you're out of ideas on what to buy for friends then sometimes a typical souvenir shop like this is the place to go. By the way, there isn't much typical souvenir shops in Seattle in my opinion.
