

My trip to Lama Island, Hong Kong

In my few last days in Hong Kong, I decided to visit Lama Island with my friend from the MBA. We decided to go on Sunday soon after my last exam of Sales and Sales man ship and left at around noon time. Since, Lama Island is not connected with rest of the Hong Kong with MTR, so taking ferry was the only option, which indeed is an interesting option. Ferry leaves every half an hour from Central ferry station.

After arriving there, it dint feel like contemporary Hong Kong any more. It had a very country side feeling to it. After crossing hustle bustle of entry port, we passed through a residential area and life there seems stand still. It was a good break to see such relaxed atmosphere after living in chaotic and hyperactive Hong Kong Island.

Lamma was named after the shape of the island which looks like the fork of a tree, or the Chinese character 丫. Interestingly we could hike most of the Island and the first thing we saw was the wind mill as depicted in the picture. It was a fascinating view over the top of mountain. We then headed towards a small beach on the island and decided to spend rest of the time there. It was a very nice beach and was worth taking a nap after getting tired in water.

Finally, before leaving the Island, just before the port, we decided to satisfy our hunger with some delicious sea food.
